Shifting, Breaking Down, Reassembling, Relocating
New Floor Layout Takes Shape During the Summer

More spacious and airy and round tables up the center aisle greet the visitor as he or she enters the Montgomery Library this Fall. During the summer, the library staff has been busy shifting books, rearranging shelves, disassembling and moving shelves, and relocating collections.

The changes are in conjunction with the creation of the Faculty Resource Center (FRC) in the library’s basement. The FRC is being funded by a Title III grant from the U.S. Department of Education.

Construction in the basement began at the end of last Spring Semester. The former Teacher Learning Resource Center was transformed into offices and space for the FRC. Print periodicals, formerly upstairs, are now located where music reference and listening stations once were. Four library staff offices, with a hallway, were built next to the FRC.

Across the hall from the FRC, the classroom and a library work room were combined, and the music and art collections were relocated from the main floor to the basement. In the same room, a study area was set up.

More space was created upstairs by removing a row of book shelves and many ranges from the ends of other rows. The rows were relocated in the new space in the basement.

In the additional space on the main floor, students and faculty can now study at six carrels, sit leisurely in comfortable chairs to read, talk, and/or exercise on newly acquired equipment, or sit around three tables in the center aisle.

Need to Keep Current in Scholarship?

New App Facilitates Search of Academic Journals

A new browsing tool is being provided by Montgomery Library (ML). It gives both faculty members and students the ability to monitor the latest issues of academic journals and stay up to date in their field of interest.

BrowZine is an app in which you can access scholarly journals with your iPad, iPhone, Android tablet, or Android smartphone as well as your PC or laptop. It favors current awareness and browsing over focused research. Journal content from multiple publishers and platforms are located in one place. From there you can save your favorite journals, view table of contents, and read or save articles as new issues are released. All content comes from EBSCO hosted databases.

BrowZine is not designed for in-depth research or searching. Deep research is best done with CU Search or the many databases and indexes document that ML provides.

You can download BrowZine from ML’s webpage.
